Plans Being Made for the Meeting at Topsham Next Month. This is the season when the active grange workers begin to plan for the annual field day in their county and that is just what some of our Sagadahoc county grangers are doing now. These meetings for the last few years have been held at Merrymeeting Park but this year it will be held at Topsham fair grounds and it will be an all day session with picnic dinner at noon. The date which has been selected is Thursday, August 24 and it is expected that it will be one of the largest attended meetings ever held in this county and the rallying committee will try to see that every granger, and his family, who can be there attends.

The Maine grangers stand strong for prohibition and as the meeting is to be held shortly before the election when that issue will be settled, prohibition will be one of the subjects to be treated. One of the speakers on this subject will be Hon. Andrew Elliott of Gault, Ontario. Among the other speakers will be: B. Walker McKee who will talk on the parcels post, Howard Davies of Yarmouth will speak on Direct Primaries, State Master. Stetson will discuss good roads and there will be a number of other speakers.

The Topsham fair grounds should be an ideal place for such a meeting as the grand stand will make an excellent place for those who go to hear the speakers and can be used regardless of the weather conditions so that there is no danger of having to postpone the meeting on account of unfavorable weather. Sagadahoc grangers should keep the date in mind and plan to attend the meeting August 24.

CRACK MILITARY COMPANY.

(Continued from Page One.) toll for this little city to pay but she made the sacrifice like so many other cities and never did the spirit of patriotism waver. That the same spirit has been active ever since was shown in the Spanish War when Bath sent out a company of militia and one of naval reserves and that she would again respond should occasion demand cannot be doubted by anyone who knows how well our citizens soldiery of today is learning the duties of war to preserve the peace.

INVITATION TO FUNERAL.

I presume Mr. Bridge gave a copy to the Maine Historical Society and doubtless to the colleges in the State. He did also send a copy to the town of Phippsburg on account of the name it bears, though why that section of old Georgetown assumed such a name is not discoverable, for Phips had no imaginable relations with it more than any other locality—Woolwich excepted, in the Kennebec valley. Sometimes it proves difficult to select a name agreeable to the majority or to the one somebody who frequently decides.

In respect to the card itself, the central part having the printed invitation is nearly three inches in width and one and three-fourths in height; it is surrounded by a border in black making the whole four inches by three and one-half, yet not a rectangle because the upper side is a curve reducing the corners. Prominent at the top supporting a winged hourglass, is "Memento Mori," and its English equivalent below, enforced by skeletons, gravedigger's tools, skulls and every repellent emblem suggesting mortality and the charnel house.

The upper left margin has the name "Major Gen'l Winthrop," and a seal which proves it is a copy of the original card of invitation to Fitz-John Winthrop and addressed to him in writing with a seal of the person in authority issuing it. Any specimen of this card found in England having the name of Gen. Winthrop inscribed, must be surely referred to this original preserved in the Winthrop family.

One will presume that a few of the cards of invitation used transiently at the funeral by those chosen to be attendants, or pallbearers—a limited number—when the corpse was borne to the church, were preserved and found their way into public repositories in England and might be disclosed by search in libraries or the British Museum; but as often these few persons after the occasion was past would regard them of no further interest and to be thrown aside, for this unknown governor of a colony across the ocean had gained no high standing to be held in regardful memory as would a peer or prince. Hence there is a possibility that this card inviting Gen. Winthrop to this special duty with honor may be the only one in existence. Be there few or none elsewhere this one is a well-prized memorial relic. Without setting Wm. Phips up to high renown, Robert C. Winthrop might justly prize the original, and be commended, not restricting the relic to his own family, for placing copies within the reach of all students of history.

In full or reduced size the relic has been portrayed in some histories of the United States and nearly twenty-five years ago was introduced into a volume of the collections of the Maine Historical Society in illustration of the Life of Phips by Mr. Wm. Gould.

In 1695 an ocean telegraph had not been dreamed of, nor did steamships speed news across the Atlantic, so that the death of Sir William on Feb. 14, was not made known in Boston till the 5th of May. Sewall's Diary on the 6th notes, "The mourning guns are fired at the castle and town for the death of our governor."

After Mr. Bridge had sent his gift to Woolwich, in a resulting letter concerning Phips he wrote to me, saying "I have discovered an original and authentic portrait of Sir Wm. Phips, but at present eye a copy is beyond my reach." Indicating his interest, he mentioned that after a projected journey he proposed to make, further research concerning the life of Phips, but I had no later report. He was very desirous to secure a portrait for the Historical Society, but I have no information that the one he had discovered was proved authentic in agreement with his belief, nor that it in comparison with one other regarded authentic is the original from which the copy was made recently given to the society.

IN THE OLD RUM DAYS.

who has been in the habit of drinking any intoxicating spirit since the first day of November last by signing the pledge" while article 10 said: "No person shall be allowed at the regular meetings of this society who has not drank liquors since November last."

Among the signers were a large number of prominent men of the city who joined this movement of their own accord to help do away with the drinking and sale of liquor in the community.

According to a local historian the first barn ever raised in Bath without the serving of liquor was the talk of the town for days before the raising was to occur and it was freely predicted that it could not be done successfully. When the day arrived crowds gathered from near and far to watch the process. Over 100 men stood around with their hands in their pockets and wouldn't lift but some of the women did and in spite of the jeers of the thirsty bystanders the barn was raised and stood for many a year.

These movements went on year after year until finally came the passage of the Maine liquor law which has remained on the statutes ever since it was originally passed. For years the cry has been raised for resubmission but not until a year ago did the people of Maine elect a legislature which would vote to resubmit the question. This has been done and it rests with the people of Maine as to what they will do, when on September 11 they cast their ballots on a question which has been under discussion in one form or another for the past 100 years and more
